RIP routing protocol uses the concept of distance-vector routing. Routers running RIP protocol learn about the destination networks from neighboring routers through broadcast messages. Routers running RIP protocol periodically broadcast the configured networks from all ports. Listing routers update their routing tables from these broadcasts.

RIP - Routing Information Protocol Explained

RIP (Routing Information Protocol) is one of the oldest distance vector routing protocols. It is usually used on small networks because it is very simple to configure and maintain, but lacks some advanced features of routing protocols like OSPF or EIGRP. Two versions of the protocol exists: version 1 and version 2.
