Humani Generis Evolution Reading Completely

Catholic evolutionists point to Pope Pius XII's encyclical letter Humani Generis as their Magna Carta for professing belief in macroevolution. However, it is no such thing. A complete, careful, and consistent reading of the document shows that Pius XII was no friend of evolution. He clearly saw the danger it presents to the Catholic faith.

Humani Generis | Betrayed Catholics

Most people (including this writer) did much the same, and filed Pope Pius XII's Humani generis in their "mental filing cabinets" under the topic "evolution." While the encyclical did mention evolution in a paragraph or two, it is much more concerned with the terrible things that were beginning to happen to Catholic philosophy and theology when the Holy Father wrote back in 1950.

Humani generis

Thus, Humani Generis only allows special theistic evolution to be discussed by faithful and orthodox Catholics. This is the theory that, at some moment in time, God specially intervened in the evolutionary process to create the body of man; that is God moved the evolutionary process forward by a quantum leap so that this new 'animal' would be capable of receiving a human soul. After the discoveries of modern biology and Humani Generis, it took awhile for many Catholics to get comfortable taking these passages in a less literal sense. But, just as they grew at ease taking the geocentric-sounding passages in a heliocentric manner, they also began to take passages like Genesis 2:7 in a manner compatible with human evolutionism.

Evolution and the Magisterium | Catholic Answers

Now in its fifth printing! A Catholic Assessment of Evolution Theory explains the relevance of beliefs about origins by showing that the harmony of truth in science, history, Catholic theology, and Thomistic philosophy unanimously suggests the immediate creation of mankind by God, to the exclusion of any type of evolutionary process.
