General Overviews. Earlier European-language overviews of Muslim Africa stressed center-periphery relations in the expansion of Islam, distinguishing between northern and sub-Saharan Africa (e.g., Trimmingham 1986), but recent works emphasize initiatives in all contexts and interactions in and across frontiers. Loimeier 2013 provides an overview in regional chapters, Robinson 2004 has several ...

This book, which continues my studies of Islam in Africa, is primarily a phenomenological study of the religious life of West African Muslims. My special aim has been to try to assess what has been the result of the impact of Islam, the way it influences African society, and, conversely, the way the African community moulds the Islam it receives.
